EVENT SITUATION

You are to assume the role of a customer service supervisor at a local clothing store called TRENDY THREADS. The store manager (judge) has received feedback that some employees struggle with handling customer complaints effectively, leading to dissatisfaction among shoppers.

Last week, a customer visited TRENDY THREADS to return a sweater that had shrunk after one wash, despite following the care instructions. When the customer approached the checkout counter, the employee, visibly frustrated by the busy shift, dismissed the customer's concerns, stating, "That's not our fault, you must have washed it wrong." The customer became upset and asked to speak to a manager. Instead of calming the situation, the employee continued to argue, saying, "I can't help you if you won't admit you made a mistake." The interaction ended with the customer leaving the store without a resolution and leaving negative feedback online.

The manager (judge) wants you to lead a training session for the staff focused on the importance of emotional intelligence in customer interactions. You need to explain how understanding emotions can improve customer service and overall customer relations.

The role-play will take place in the store's break room. The manager (judge) will begin the role-play by greeting you and expressing their concerns about customer service. After you have presented your training ideas and answered the manager's (judge's) questions, the manager (judge) will conclude the role-play by thanking you for your insights.

Possible Judge's Questions:

1. How will you measure the success of this training session and its impact on customer service in the store?
2. How do you plan to engage the staff during the training session to ensure they understand and appreciate the value of emotional intelligence in handling customer complaints?
